

You Say You Want a Revolution?

02/13/02

Letter:

02/11/02

Feature:

02/05/02

Feature:

01/31/02

News:

01/29/02

Letter:

Some revolutions are difficult to televise. They're complicated, they cost a lot of money, they take up a lot of time. Hell, some aren't even televised at all. (Usually those types are no good for anybody. Am I right?) But no matter what, this revolution WILL be televised, and—no bullshit—we think you're just the broadcasting company to do it. We're looking for the right camera crew, production company, and network on which to broadcast it, and we think you might be the perfect fit!

This revolution will feature it all. Picture it. We've got the hotheaded, fiery young characters who learn from their mistakes and eventually save the day in the end. We've got the smoldering Ed Harris types, villainous yet admirable, who serve as both the role model and foil to our heroes. We've got the nerdy weaklings that come through in the clutch. We've got the good, clever, humorous, religious guys who love their parents and who die tragically.

We've got child spies. We've got heroic women. We've got racial harmony and lessons learned from it. We've got the phrase "The student has become the teacher." We've got it all, baby!

We even have camouflage.

(Have we mentioned the sex? We've got loving sex, desperate-and-any-port-in-a-storm sex, and hot, animalistic sex. Of course, this will all be TV-appropriate, but as revolutions go, this one is sexier than any one you've ever seen.)

Oh yeah... the enemy. We haven't decided yet what we will be revolting against, but you can have total input on that. If you want to revolt against capitalism and greed, that's fine. If you want to revolt against a tyrannical leader, whatever. That's, you know, up in the air.

All our revolutionists are SAG registered and trained in singing and dancing (tap, jazz, and funk). They bring their own stylists and makeup. They can all cry on command (real tears—no glycerin). They sing. They can do accents. They can play "blue." You will not find a more moving, talented, or telegenic revolution out there.

This revolution is guaranteed to garner all audiences: children, seniors, males 18-35, single mothers and soccer moms. It's a can't-miss revolution! We promise you, if you televise our revolution, it'll get you higher ratings than any other revolution, mutiny, or uprising that thus far has been televised, even CBS's 1998 triumph "Coup For You."

We just want to let you know that we've had some very competitive offers from other broadcasting networks, but we thought that this might be something you'd find especially interesting. We're looking for a great time slot and the appropriate amount of build-up. Our revolutionists are willing to do Jay, Dave, Conan, Craig, whatever. We are in the middle of talking to Barbara Walters' people.

So let's do this! What can we get you to do to televise this revolution? If you want, we'll get those guys from "Good Will Hunting," you know, the guy with the teeth and the guy with the drinking problem, if that's what it takes. Tom Hanks? He's on the set already. You want blood and gore? No problem. You want it to be strictly civil disobedience? So be it. Soundtrack by Celine Dion? She's in the studio as we speak!

Like we said, this revolution will be televised...and how! So what do you say?